Sturt Fleurieu expands into South-East

Exciting move makes Sturt Fleurieu largest rural training provider in State

Sturt Fleurieu, one of the country's most innovative and recognized providers of GP training, is expanding to become the largest rural training provider in South Australia.

In an exciting move that reflects our passion for medicine and commitment to training tomorrow's GPs, we have increased our training footprint to include the South-East of the State.

From January 2011, our innovative learning experiences and opportunities will be provided in practices and medical facilities throughout the South-East including Naracoorte, Millicent and Mount Gambier. Training delivery is also being considered in a range of other South-East locations.

This expansion provides a tremendous opportunity to become an outstanding doctor in one of the most diverse regions in our State.

By joining Sturt Fleurieu and training in the South-East, registrars will be provided with superior opportunities including the chance to be part of small learning groups with the region's most outstanding medical educators.

In addition, they'll have the opportunity to develop their own medical interests, supported by GP supervisors and our recognised team.

Sturt Fleurieu's innovative approach to training - already successfully implemented in other areas of South Australia - will be applied throughout the region providing valuable exposure to our award-winning gp-start, gp-advanced, PGPPP and workshop programs.

Clinical attachments in a range of specialist areas will also be provided in conjunction with the Flinders University Rural Clinical School.

As part of the expansion, we plan to work closely with the Limestone Coast Division of General Practice, Rural Doctors Workforce Agency and Country Health SA to deepen our understanding of regional medical issues and further develop our training approach with local general practice supervisors.

This will enable us to formulate a regional program which provides our registrars, interns and medical educators with the latest industry knowledge and skills for working within the challenging environment of general practice.

Sturt Fleurieu's highly experienced team will support registrars to complete all aspects of general practice training essential for them to become the best doctor they can be.
